Re: Traffic Box Art Program

Executive Summary

In the coming months, the Office of Cultural Affairs (OCA) intends to address an 11th downtown traffic signal box via its Traffic Box Art program as part of the city's overall graffiti abatement program. In advance of that, a contract with the artist needs to be executed.

Discussion

In 2007, the OCA was part of a working committee meeting with the Police Department to address the problem of graffiti. With similar projects in other cities nationwide serving as examples, one traffic signal box in downtown Columbia was selected to be painted. At the time, it had been repeatedly vandalized with graffiti. That September, local artist David Spear painted the box, using materials recommended by the OCA for outdoor use. The box has deterred vandalism, and the OCA has observed that the materials used stand up to outdoor elements.

Since then, OCA staff developed guidelines for additional boxes to be addressed by artists; the Commission on Cultural Affairs approved the guidelines in September 2008. In 2009, local artist Dennis Murphy was selected to paint a second box; a third was completed by local artist Kate Gray in July 2010; the fourth completed in the summer of 2011 by Stephanie Foley; the fifth completed in the summer of 2012 by Andrew Glenn; the sixth completed in September 2013 by Ben Chlapek; the seventh completed in October 2014 by Peggy Guest; the eighth box completed in July 2015 by Lisa Bartlett; the ninth box was completed in July 2016 by Madeleine LeMieux; the tenth box was completed by Brittany Williamson in 2017. They, too, have remained untouched by vandalism since completion.

In 2018, an 11th installment of the program is set to get underway. Mid-Missouri artist Amanda Harms has been selected by the city's sub-Committee of the Standing Committee of Public Art for her design concept. Ms. Harms is a prolific artist from Columbia who is a painter and currently completing a BFA in painting with a drawing emphasis from Columbia College. She has exhibited her work in Columbia and also worked on collaborative theatre set design projects.

Ms. Harm's design has been approved by the same sub-committee of the Standing Committee on Public Art that selected her. Pending Council approval, Ms. Harm will execute a contract and will undertake the actual execution of the artwork proposed, likely starting in May, weather depending. Program guidelines stipulate the materials to be used. The sealant is an anti-graffiti product. The guidelines for the project also state that the final design may
