19 November 24 CecileBentley VOTES 2	Strengthen requirements re: demolition. Jefferson City has prevented the demolition of several of their historic properties, why not here? The Plan should include or recommend codes that prevent demolition of historic buildings and incentives for preservation. It should also recommend maintenance standards so we do not experience demolition by neglect. Historic buildings have been allowed to deteriorate and then are demolished to make way for modern and out-of-character construction - even in designated historic districts. The HPC and the City Council need the ability to prevent the unnecessary loss of the buildings that give character to our neighborhoods. .
12 December 24 TK VOTES 0	Why? In the city's annual citizen surveys, historic preservation has consistently ranked at the very bottom in terms of what people believe should be priorities. Leave this to owners of historic homes and buildings.
13 January 25 CoMoMatt VOTES 1	Wonderful! Other Missouri cities have had historic preservation plans for many years, at Missouri's 4th largest city we should as well.
13 January 25 bmink VOTES 1	Any historic preservation plan should be created so that it cannot be weaponized by NIMBYs to block any developments they don't like. This is the main pitfall I see with a program like this being implemented citywide, as there are examples of many cities that have these historic registries or designating entire neighborhoods as historic districts to block any new development, even those that fit with the "character of the neighborhood". I would love to be able to protect historic properties in the city while also making sure whatever program or initiative we set up will not be used by people to try to stop any development, upzoning, or rezoning change they do not like.

15 January 25	VOTES 0	The City should include match-grant Money for restoration, rehabilitation, improvement, renovation & transformation Any work in older homes cost more, since they are not standard. Any monetary help to homeowners will incentive to maintain and improve the property and neighborhood.
